Dear Applicant,

Enclosed please find the application for conversion which you requested. Once we receive your completed application form, our office will contact you to set an appointment with the Rabbinic Administrator. At this time, we will briefly answer some commonly asked questions about our program. Please read this letter carefully because it contains important guidelines for our program.

How Difficult Is an Orthodox Conversion?

Very. Conversion to Judaism is the most significant decision in your life. It requires real lifestyle changes including many basics such as eating habits and work schedule. Conversion to Judaism can strain family ties, and it will certainly alter the way you look at the world. Nevertheless, if you are willing and able to meet these demands, we will encourage you and do our best to ensure a smooth process.

What Is Expected of Me?

Gradually and at your own pace, you are expected to learn and live as a religiously observant Orthodox Jew. The Rabbis and your other teachers will help guide you in practicing what you learn, but it is up to you to show motivation and a desire to live the Judaism you are taught.

Living In An Orthodox Community

In order for the conversion to take place, the Bet Din will require you to live within reasonable proximity of an Orthodox synagogue, where you can comfortably participate in traditional community life. Walking great distances, or making arrangements to stay with friends on Shabbat, is not an acceptable alternative. There are no exceptions to this requirement.

We do understand that moving can be difficult for financial and other reasons. We insist upon it only because we know it is so essential for your future growth and success. Joining a community is one of the first and most important steps we will require.

How Long Does Conversion Take?

This varies considerably, depending upon your previous background and knowledge of Judaism. Generally, you should expect the process to take between 18 to 24 months from the time we receive your application. However, some candidates meet our requirements faster, while others do take longer. In almost all cases, a slow and thoughtful process is a better experience. It is also in the best interest of the converts themselves. “Fast track” conversions are sometimes challenged, and may not be universally accepted.

Why the Conversion Take So Long?

What Is It The Beit Din Looks For?

Many applicants come to the Beit Din with a misconception. They think the court’s chief function is to measure the sincerity of the would-be convert, and to assess the worthiness of the applicant to join the Jewish people. This leads to much frustration when applicants believe they have amply demonstrated their sincerity, yet the Bet Din still holds back from converting them.

In fact, the Bet Din plays a very different role. Jewish law – not the Bet Din – determines who can convert. Simply put, anyone who can fully accept the demands of a committed, halachic Jewish life is a candidate for conversion. But the Rabbis of the Bet Din have to determine based on their collective knowledge and many years of experience, whether the conversion will be in the best interests of the candidate. The Bet Din has to develop confidence that the obligation of full observance is something that the candidate will be able to bear and maintain, given his or her unique situation and challenges. Our failure to do so would be irresponsible to the candidate.

To make this prediction, the Bet Din observes the growth and adjustment of the candidate over an extended period of time. How well does he/she integrate into the community? What mentors and teachers are available? How well are they used? What problems, if any, need to be addressed in the short run and the long run?

A Bet Din conversion requires more than learning material and finding a comfortable synagogue. It means integrating into the Orthodox Jewish community and developing a support system. This reassures all of us that the decision to convert is a positive and healthy one. It also ensures that your conversion if you complete it will be respected and accepted around the world for its thoroughness and integrity.

Relationships

You undoubtedly know that Judaism does not allow or recognize intermarriage. You can still apply and be accepted in our program even if you are civilly married or have a relationship with a Jewish person. However, if you have a relationship and considering marriage with a Jewish person, you are both expected to participate in the learning process. Failure to be open with us concerning a relationship is grounds for dismissal from the Conversion program.

We also want you to know that civilly married couples are expected to maintain separate living quarters for a three-month period following a conversion. We recognize that this sometimes poses hardships when children are involved, and we will try to assist you to find acceptable solutions where necessary. Singles are expected to maintain an appropriate lifestyle, and at the very least must physically separate for a ninety-two-day period prior to a conversion. We invite you to discuss any difficulties you may have in this regard with the Bet Din's Rabbis.

Family Ties

Conversion means taking on a new identity. Judaism understands and expects that you will continue to treat your family of origin with respect and dignity. Nevertheless, an Orthodox conversion will affect family ties in important ways. You will no longer be able to attend church services, even for weddings and other life cycle occasions. While you might be able to eat some foods in family homes, the kosher diet will severely restrict sharing meals. Perhaps most difficult, holidays that families celebrate together such as December 25 and Easter will be off limits. We encourage you to consider these issues and speak with your family about the changes they will surely notice.

Sponsoring Rabbi

The conversion program requires you to have a “sponsoring Rabbi”. This does not mean that your Rabbi is responsible for your conversion. What is important is that you have an Orthodox Rabbi who is willing to assist you by providing guidance and direction to help you become part of his community. The sponsoring Rabbi should be willing to periodically report to the Bet Din on your participation in the synagogue activities and classes, and give us oral or email updates prior to each Bet Din meeting with you.

You may apply to our program even if you do not have a sponsoring Rabbi at this time, but this requirement will have to be met for you to advance in the program.

What Are The Costs?

The Bet din is a non-profit organization and We do our best to keep the costs of conversion down but meeting our overhead for administering this program is what enables us to provide our services. A $150 application fee is due with your completed application. When and if the conversion takes place, there is an additional payment of $750 which covers all other administrative charges. The Mikvah charges a $65 fee for the immersion completing a conversion.

Other Study Costs

Applicants who advance in the program are eventually assigned a private Classes With Rabbi Lasry who will teach the necessary material. generally the fees are $60 per study hour. The amount of study required depends greatly on previous Jewish learning. you can also purchase the Course Online at www.RabbiLasry.com

Once you fill up the application, you need to schedule a meeting with Rabbi Lasry, and then you can register online and start the process by your self. or Join to the Group every week at Rabbi Lasry's synagogue- Tehilat Yitzchak Center. address: 3342 Griffin Rd, Fort Lauderdale FL 33312

Getting Started

The first step in applying for the conversion program is to read this information carefully and decide if this is what you are looking for. If you think it is, please send in your completed application. Sorry, no meetings or interviews can be granted without our office processing your fully completed application to open up your file.

When Do I Know If I Am Accepted?

The conversion process has several stages. Once we open your file, the Rabbinic Administrator will contact you to set up an initial interview and explain the program in detail. At that meeting you will receive a required reading list along with an overview of the Bet Din conversion procedures.

If, after completing your reading list, you decide to continue with the program, we will arrange a meeting with a panel of Rabbis (Bet Din) who will decide the terms and prerequisites for your candidacy. This meeting may give you some idea of the likelihood for success, but our agreement to do the conversion is not guaranteed until you have shown significant progress in the total program.

Yours sincerely,
